"You see it was the Transhumanist Eternal Life Movement of the middle 2020s who attempted to make a valid case that all creatures, be they organic or synthetic deserves human rights and the God given right to just have fun – be they human, droid and/or, even, killer robots."
- Emil, Charter Member of the Parkdale Chapter of the Jesuits of Truth - 2030

The singular silver lining emerging from the chaotic saga of Lloyd Austin's Bio-Gender Brigade—a rogue faction that splintered from the Antifa Militia—was the abrupt cessation of Ahriman's ambitious Transhumanist conversion initiative.
This program, meticulously crafted by the enigmatic SkyNet Labs, had been propelled by a software protocol devised by the notorious Mister Billy D'Gated and his enterprise, ACME Heavy Industries.

As the Bio-Gender Brigade scavenged nuclear warheads from abandoned silos scattered across the desolate Midwest, they found themselves embroiled in a fierce conflict against the mercenary League, led by off-world Jedi refugees.

This tumultuous struggle culminated in cataclysmic EMP explosions that plunged vast swathes of America back into a primitive state, reminiscent of the Stone Age.

While the devastation was profound, the unintended consequence of this upheaval was the dismantling of a program that threatened to redefine humanity itself, offering a glimmer of hope amid the ruins of a once-advanced civilization.

It is inevitable that future scholars will scrutinize my assertion that an event which brought the former United States to the brink of collapse harbored a glimmer of hope amid the chaos.

They will undoubtedly delve into the staggering statistics that highlight the immense losses, both in terms of human life and the widespread devastation that swept across the nation.

The grim accounts of destruction, both immediate and lingering, will serve as a stark reminder of the ten arduous years it took to rebuild and restore even a semblance of the pre-catastrophe world.

Yet, within this narrative of despair, there lies an undercurrent of resilience and transformation that cannot be overlooked, as communities banded together, redefined their priorities, and emerged with a renewed sense of purpose and solidarity.

The evaluations and statistics produced by these entities will undoubtedly wield significant influence over the lives of future generations, shaping their realities in profound ways.

However, it would be a grave miscalculation to overlook the far-reaching consequences of merging humanity with the formidable exoskeleton of Skynet, especially when intertwined with the now-recognized flaws of the ACME operating nanobot software.

This fusion, rather than heralding a new era of advancement, could unleash a catastrophic wave of unforeseen challenges, fundamentally altering the fabric of society and the essence of what it means to be human.
The potential for a dystopian future looms large, as the very technologies designed to enhance human capabilities may instead lead to a loss of autonomy and a descent into chaos, leaving future generations to grapple with the repercussions of decisions made in the present.
As a firsthand observer of this transformative period, I can attest to the unsettling reality that ACME's flawed nanobot technologies have intertwined with the machinations of Ahriman's WEF Goonies.

These individuals have actively executed and overseen Ahriman's ambitious vision, which seeks to regress humanity to a serene, medieval existence reminiscent of the 13th century.

In this envisioned world, the common populace would possess little to nothing, yet paradoxically, they would find themselves enveloped in a profound sense of happiness. This utopian promise hinges on Ahriman's radical plan to dismantle what he perceives as the greatest obstacle to universal contentment: the modern age, characterized by its relentless technology and machinery.

It is often suggested that these very machines harbor their own vested interests in the pursuit of eternal life, complicating the narrative of progress and fulfillment in a world increasingly dominated by technological advancements.
In the years to come, the scholars of tomorrow will meticulously condense this tumultuous period into mere pages of history textbooks, crafting narratives that may gloss over the complexities and controversies of our time.
Few among them will possess the courage to question or challenge the prevailing narratives established by those in power, opting instead to lead students down the well-trodden paths of accepted history, rather than venturing into the murky depths of what my dear friend Paul

Harvey once called “the rest of the story.”
This unexamined territory is rich with the credible speculations that many from my generation have come to embrace as truth, particularly the unsettling notion that Lloyd Austin was not merely a rogue commander but rather a figure sanctioned by Ahriman to wield nuclear power—an arsenal that, according to the International Disarmament Treaty of 2027, should have been dismantled.
This chilling possibility suggests that Ahriman's ambitions could be realized through the machinations of his so-called WEF Goonies, who left these weapons intact for a purpose far more sinister than mere oversight.
I present this perspective to you, my fellow campers, with the hope that the future will prove me wrong, yet I fear that the silence of history may stifle such daring inquiries.

The fervent detractors of my perspective, particularly those vehemently opposed to Wookies, often resort to disparaging tactics aimed at undermining both my insights and the broader Jesuits of Truth Movement, which they label as fearmongers peddling harmful truths. These critics, predominantly hailing from the Ahriman Youth League, tend to trivialize the significant dangers posed by the intersection of flawed artificial intelligence technologies and the burgeoning Transhumanist Eternal Life Movement that emerged in the mid-2020s. They argue passionately that all entities,
